

Europe Solidaire Sans Frontières > English > Europe, Great Britain > Eastern Europe & Russian Federation > Passive revolution and gramscian hegemony in Eastern Europe. Podcast with (...)

Passive revolution and gramscian hegemony in Eastern Europe. Podcast with Volodymyr Ishchenko

Wednesday 9 March 2022, by Corner Späti, ISHCHENKO Volodymyr (Date first published: 7 March 2022).

We speak with Volodymyr Ishchenko on his work on the broader phenomenon of recurring revolutionary moments in Eastern Europe, which seem to change nothing, or just lead to increased nationalism or war.

In this long interview for a popular and usually satirical Berlin podcast Corner Späti, Volodymyr Ishchenko talks not about the current events but about the Gramscian analysis of the post-Soviet period with Oleg Zhuravlev: the Soviet crisis of hegemony, deficient conservative (Putinism) and revolutionary (Maidan) solutions. How to understand these broader phenomenon of recurring revolutionary moments which seem to change nothing, or just lead to increased nationalism or war. Why are contemporary revolutions in the post-Soviet space not bringing revolutionary transformations but rather nationalist radicalization. Ishchenko also discusses the ways in which this war may be the beginning of the end of the crisis.

Volodymyr Ishchenko
Corner Späti
Robert B. Knödel

Click here to subscribe to ESSF newsletters in English and/or French.

P.S.

Corner Späti

<https://www.operationglad.io/174>