

Indonesia: Thousands join women's march in Jakarta for justice, gender equality

Tuesday 30 April 2019, by CAHYA Gemma Holliani (Date first published: 27 April 2019).

Thousands of people marched from Jl. Sudirman to the National Monument (Monas) in Jakarta on Saturday for the 2019 Women's March to support women's rights and commemorate the birthday of Kartini, the country's national heroine and women empowerment icon.

People of different genders, occupations and religions gathered to show their support for better protection and empowerment of women amid rampant violence perpetrated against them.

"This is an everyday struggle for all of us, to fight for justice and gender equality. Many problems that we are facing are because the political elite is trying stop us from seeking justice and equality. Don't let them silence us," the march's field coordinator, Ririn Sefsani, told the crowd.

This year is the third celebration of the annual march and the crowd is getting bigger each year. Women's March Jakarta recorded that in 2017, when it was first held, only 800 people took part. The number increased to 2,000 participants last year and 4,000 today.

The Women's March committee said it did not expect such a massive crowd to show up this year. For safety reasons, it changed the march's schedule — which is usually held in the first week of March — because of the general election this year.

"This is a political year and we just had legislative and presidential elections a week ago, so at first we thought that some people might be afraid to speak up about these issues, but apparently it didn't affect them. The crowd is really great today, we saw so many new faces," spokesperson Skolastika Lupitawina told The Jakarta Post at the event.

The march was held under the theme of the global women's march movement, which is Women in Politics.

Activists gave the government 10 demands that cover various topics, including the long-awaited sexual violence and domestic worker protection bills, the elimination or revision of discriminative laws and by-laws as well as social protection for every gender and social group.

The march was also held in celebration of Kartini's birthday on April 21. Coming from a noble family in the 19th century, she was forced into an arranged marriage to a regent in Java. Her concerns about the poor living conditions of women around her drove her to open a school for them.

She also spoke out against gender injustice at the time through letters to her friends in the Netherlands. Her letters, which were later disclosed to the public, reflected an early awakening of Indonesian women amid a patriarchal society in pre-independence Indonesia.

Gemma Holliani Cahya

P.S.

- The Jakarta Post / Jakarta / Sat, April 27, 2019 / 05:45 pm:
<https://www.thejakartapost.com/news/2019/04/27/thousands-join-womens-march-in-jakarta-for-justice-gender-equality.html>